

Attending Skills Training to Meet Mentoring Partners

An assistant professor in the Department of Psychology used her grant to seek external mentoring as she prepared a new graduate course. She attended a week-long training session sponsored by the Marine Biological Laboratory, which enabled her to build a network of research and teaching faculty from the medical schools at Harvard, Johns Hopkins, and the University of Pittsburgh. She remained in regular contact with her fellow session participants who were designing their own courses at their home campuses.